NEEDS OF BUCKS COUNTY YOUTH TOLD AT FORUM

Most Common Offense of Those in Contact With Law is Larceny

AIM AT A SOLUTION

A survey on the needs of the Youth of Bucks County, which is being made by the Women's International League, shows that the most common offense committed by those between 16 and 25 who come in contact with the law is that of larceny.

A forum meeting on this subject was held in Doylestown Inn, last week, with reports being received from Mrs. T. J. Keating, Mrs. Herman Flessner, Mrs. Cecil J. Toor, and Mrs. George Leworothy. The presiding officer was Mrs. Toor, and the discussion was led by Mrs. John A. Lester.

Mrs. Toor showed an ingenious graph depicting higher education and employment trends of high school graduates of Doylestown and Buckingham of the last ten years. The fact was brought out that only 10 per cent of the newcomers in Bucks county have children, showing a surprising new trend.

Mrs. Keating dealt with the number of persons in the county between 16 and 25 who become institutional cases or come into conflict with the law, as obtained from police sources.

During the discussion Dr. Lester commented on how many of the 16-to-25 group could profit by a college education, calling attention to the inequality of opportunity. To give able youth equal opportunity and to bring out qualities of leadership needs a federal equalization scheme which will probably come in time, Dr. Lester said. The question of learning trades and how many need it with mass production increasing, was also raised. It was brought out that students in the local high school are given aptitude tests each year.

What the National Youth Administration offers and has available to youth of the county was reported by Mrs. Leworothy. Among the facts brought out was that every tenth youth in the country as a whole is a Negro.

A report sent by Miss Laura Haines gave facts about the community center in Bristol. Sponsored by the Rotary Club there, its instructors are paid by the N. Y. A.

Much interest centered around the information gathered by Mrs. Flessner from many sources over the country on how communities are solving problems of leisure time and delinquency among youth.

Mrs. Lester stressed the need for greater use and development of swimming, skating and bicycling places, hiking trails, etc., and consideration of potential leadership for Scouting, community singing and dancing, nature walks, work for libraries, and other valuable projects.

LEMON GIVES ENOUGH JUICE FOR THREE PIES

Mrs. John Sabatini, Washington Street, Has Prize Specimens

ONE WEIGHS 1 3/4 POUNDS

Three family-sized pies from juice of one lemon!

Sounds fantastic, we admit, but Mrs. John Sabatini, 441 Washington street, can boast of lemons weighing 1 3/4 pounds from her lemon tree.

Plucking one of the four large ones which the tree bore this year, Mrs. Sabatini proceeded to extract the juice, and had sufficient to make three large pies.

The second largest lemon weighed approximately 1 1/2 pounds, the other two being somewhat smaller.

One of the fine specimens Mrs. Sabatini presented to someone as a gift, and the other two remain on the healthy-looking tree which is so well cared for by the family.

Each Summer the large tub is carried to the lawn, but back in the house it goes before the first hint of frost. During the Winter the tree remains by a window in the house, where it might have fairly even temperature. The tree is trimmed on occasion by Mr. Sabatini.

Shortly after the sweet-smelling blossoms disappear the family eagerly awaits the appearance of the first signs of fruit, which is in June.

The lemon tree has been the pride of the family for the past seven or eight years, it being but a small plant when first received. But through diligent care it has grown into a sturdy tree, with satiny, dark green leaves. Since its third year it has borne several lemons annually.

ONE is because it reveals not only the individuals who will be most influential with Mr. Roosevelt in this business but indicates the atmosphere in which the selection will be made. It also reveals those who will not be consulted. Among the latter may be mentioned the members of the Supreme Court itself and of the United States Senate. Governor Approves Highway

Harrisburg, Feb. 21—Governor Arthur James withdrew his opposition today to construction of Pennsylvania's $65,000,000 "dream highway" between Harrisburg and Pittsburgh, and promised "every proper co-operation" to the Pennsylvania Turnpike Commission.

The Governor announced his action "following a detailed investigation by Secretary of Highways I. Lamont Hughes."

In the interest of his economy program, the Governor earlier opposed completion of the highway. Today, however, he declared that "both the United States and Pennsylvania would benefit from completion of this project."

"The great advantage which Pennsylvania would derive from the continuance of this project—quite aside from opening up a new east-west all-weather traffic artery," the Governor said, "would be bringing into the state many millions of dollars of Federal moneys as a partial payment of the heavy national tax burden the state is carrying."

NEW HOPE COUNCIL ADOPTS NEW PARKING LAW

Parking in Business Section Is Restricted to One Hour and On One Side

STREETS ARE NARROW

NEW HOPE, Feb. 21—After giving consideration to the parking problem on Main street, here, borough council decided to restrict parking to one hour in the business section and only on one side of the lower section of Main street. Signs will be erected.

Discussions relative to the parking situation occupied a part of the time at the meeting of the Borough Council.

Members of council took into consideration the parking situation after they had received a number of complaints. It was requested that parking regulations along Main street be adopted. It was pointed out that so many motorists park their cars in the business section all day and as a result shoppers can never find parking space. It was stated also that the parking of trucks in the middle of the streets while deliveries are being made often blocks traffic.

Council was also told that the lower part of Main street is so narrow that when cars are parked on both sides the Trenton bus and large trucks cannot pass.

Street For 64 Years

For 64 years, since the time she took up her residence on Cedar street as a bride, Mrs. Doron had made her home on that street. She was 81 years of age.

Born in Philadelphia, she moved with her parents to Andalusia, during her early childhood. It was at the time of her marriage at the age of 17 years that she came to Bristol to reside. Her husband, the late William E. Doron, was very well known in this community, having for years owned and operated the ferryboat between Bristol and Burlington, N. J. Mr. Doron had also been a life-long resident of this borough, making Cedar street his home for the entire period.

Mrs. Doron had been in ill health for the past three years, and was confined to bed since the first of December.

She is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Price I. Patton, Philadelphia; a granddaughter, Mrs. Richard T. Burroughs, Jr., Wallingford; and a grandson, Edward W. Patton, 2nd, Philadelphia. Mrs. Doron was the last of a family of 10 children.

The deceased was much interested and was exceptionally active in all organizations with which she was affiliated until the time of her illness. She was a member of the Travel Club, the Bristol Branch of the Needlework Guild of America, and St. James' Episcopal Church, of Bristol; and was affiliated with the Matinee Musical Club, Philadelphia. A Black Mark for The Major

(By "The Stroller")

The tables were literally "turned" Saturday evening when American Legion Cadets at their annual banquet heard a confession from Major Campbell Brown, of the U. S. Marine Corps.

On several occasions, when the Cadets were in stiff competition, Major Brown has been one of the inspecting staff, and the lads and lassies from Bristol claim he can find specks of dust, and a wrinkle in a piece of cloth that no one else espies. But they always took it with a smile, knowing full well he was but doing his duty, and with due respect to his fairness to all corps.

But it was with great glee the corps heard Major Brown confess on Saturday evening that the reason the jacket to his Marine uniform was unfastened at the throat was because the gold braid was broken.

OBSTRUCTED CORNERS

One of the perils of motoring is found in the obstruction of the view in the street intersection of many cities and towns. Many automobile accidents are due to the inability of drivers to see around the corners of the cross streets which they are approaching.

Many drivers take those corners on faith. They approach such a spot at a fast clip, seeming to feel that the chances are slight that a car will pop out from behind that corner at that particular moment. But if they keep passing these corners in that unthinking way, some day a car will emerge just as they are passing. About that time you can look for a job for the hospital and perhaps business for the junk man.

In some cities the old settlers planted their houses close to the street lines, and it takes extreme care to drive through such places without running into a smash. Business blocks are usually built up close to corners, and the driver who runs fast past those intersections, when he can see but a short distance up side streets, is likely to have an unpleasant surprise some day.

The man who drives a car 30 miles an hour past one of these hidden intersections is taking more chances than the one who drives 60 in the open country. It is not beneficial to either one's health or pocketbook to take these chances.

WELL DRESSED

Perhaps the man in the audience has misjudged the "best-dressed man on the screen." He may have felt that the actors for whom publicity agents made such claims were more or less foppish or duds, but in the light of seven rules of good dressing laid down by one of them that opinion will be revised.

Neatness and proper care are more important than newness. Run-over heels are taboo. So are dirty and misshapen hats. Suspenders are essential to properly draped trousers. Dirty fingernails are forgiven only on men engaged in manual labor. Only in his bedroom may a man appear unshaven.

And what price good dressing? This movie star says he can prove that a man making $40 a week can dress as well as a millionaire, main- taining that good taste and good dress are not necessarily the accompaniment of riches.

Clothes make the man, but do not accurately proclaim his credit rating.

TIME FOR HEARINGS

The bills introduced by Chairman Woodrum of the House subcommittee dealing with relief appropriations and by Senator Byrnes in the Senate should be made at once basis for hearings on Federal relief policy. Merely to cut WPA appropriation is no answer to this problem. Unless by great good luck private employment picks up extraordinarily, the expenditure will go on just the same. And Congress, whenever the money runs out, will vote a deficiency appropriation. One may be quite sure of that.

Congress should make up its mind now that, if the total cost of Federal relief is to be reduced, the only way, except that of trusting irresponsibility to good luck, is to reduce the unit cost of the case load. That is, some other and cheaper form of relief must be substituted for WPA.

It is evident that a matter so controversial will not be dealt with coolly and rationally if left to be considered under the pressure of an imminent exhaustion of relief funds.

The Great Game of Politics

Interested in having their new colleague equipped alike with a deep knowledge of the law and the well-known judicial temperament. If the journalistic reflectors of the White House politicians can be relied upon, these are not regarded as the first essentials by the gentlemen closest to the President. In this case, it is insisted, the first qualification is that the man chosen be an undiluted New Dealer; the second is that he come from the right section of the country, which means the West, from which there happens now to be no justice.

IT is flatly stated that if he could indulge his own personal preference Mr. Roosevelt would appoint either Mr. Benjamin Cohen or Mr. Jerome Frank. But, even if they were geographically right, so one authoritative chronicler asserts, "he would be afraid to name another Jew." That seems an unworthy apprehension, but it is probably true. Shopping for a Blouse?, How About These?

Spring will see a banner season on suits, say fashion experts, so you can't have too many blouses to wear with them. Here are a few, worn by New York models. KIT CARSON--Avenger!

by EVELYN WELLS

CHAPTER XVIII

They were entering level prairie land, Fremont and his men, led by Kit Carson. Behind lay Missouri—the frontier. Ahead, level as tide water, the great flat interior of unknown America Fremont was to explore.

Kit turned easily in his saddle. "There it is, Lieutenant. Level as your hand. You'll find it all like this, pretty much, all the way to the Rockies."

He was puzzled by Fremont's look—affame, like a man seeing visions. Kit rode nearer so the lads should not hear.

"This is Pawnee country and they're bad medicine. At least ten thousand of 'em scattered along the Platte, and always on the war path. Main village is about seventy-five miles ahead. Guess I'll ride on a few miles and do some scouting."

He dashed over the plain, sitting like a Comanche in his light plainsman's saddle. Fremont's sharp eyes followed him approvingly. Fremont was not unaware of his own fine appearance, as in blue and gold uniform he sat his splendid horse, Provenu. But the lithe figure in buckskin with flying, tawny hair stirred him to generous admiration. "What a picture Kit would make," commented Preuss, the artist, riding alongside Fremont.

"As fine a figure of a man on horseback," answered Fremont, "as ever I have looked upon."

But there was a frown on his high forehead.

Fremont could not regret his choice of scouts. Admirable was Kit, honest as kingdom come, but there were matters difficult for a southern gentleman to ignore. The ordeal of mess time, for instance. Kit tried to use knife and fork, but his fingers were strange to them. And on the other hand, Kit was plainly rather contemptuous of Fremont's dependency upon such utensils.

"He has lived overly long with Indians," thought Fremont, in an attempt at understanding.

He tried to think how splendid Kit was in other ways. How patient he had been with the green members of the expedition, teaching them to form a circle each night of the covered wagons and drive horses and mules within for safety. How he had taught the young boys to shoot, and enchanted them with his western stories and mountain wisdom. Kit ordered camp each day before sundown, so that by night the four cooking fires would be out, not to attract roving Pawnees. Kit selected camp sites and set guards. He showed them how to sleep on saddles that served both as pillows and protection against possible arrows, and how, sleeping, to grip with arms and knees the rifle that might mean one's life. And Kit's example had reconciled them all to sleep uncomplainingly in mud puddles, the first two nights out, when they had been overtaken by storm.

These things Fremont recalled, pacing Provenu slowly over the prairie, and trying to forget Kit's antipathy to such trivia as knives and forks and toothbrushes and soap.

But Kit was racing back over the prairie. "Buffalo!" he could be heard shouting nearly a mile away.

The Fremont men, halting, heard in the distance a rumbling sound like thunder. The ground was shaking. Miles ahead they saw a cloud of dust spread over the horizon.

Here was excitement! The boys Henry and Randolph were no wilder than the older men. Under that cloud of dust ran adventure—danger—the sport of kings.

Kit reached them. He dashed to the "xavy" and selected from the herd a horse trained for buffalo hunting. Throwing on it his Spanish silver bridle, and without waiting to change saddles, he was off shouting for the others to follow. "Look to your cinches and girths!"

he shouted, for if a man's saddle slipped in a buffalo hunt he was lost.

They were all off after Kit who rode low on his saddleless horse with his long rifle ready across its mane. Then out of the very plain, it seemed, grew darkness. Ahead, as far as eye could see, the plain was dark with buffalo, a black and rhythmic sea, the waves of which were horned!

"There's twenty thousand head in that herd," yelled Kit, racing to the lead of that advancing tide.

There was no stopping that living ocean. Alone, the American bison was a grotesque and ferocious brute, but seen many thousand fold it attained a terrifying majesty. In advance of the herd great horns rode on immense bearded heads. Here and there in the tossing sea of horns spurts of dust showed where a fight was waging between bulls.

Fremont was racing alongside Kit. Maxwell joined them, riding like an Indian. Fremont shouted at Carson:

"Doesn't your heart beat wildly?" "Aye, like a war drum!" shouted Kit, but his face was a mask.

He rounded the rushing herd. At a vulnerable place he cut in with his horse between long horns that lifted and clashed and clattered. Horns like sabres thrust around Kit, hemming him in. He gripped the horse with his knees. He shouted the Indian cry: "Hui! Hui!"

The high shrilling bewildered the buffalo. The charging horns lowered. A section of herd fell back before his cry and fled. The other men, watching breathlessly, saw Kit ride safely out of that tremendous herd that stretched as far as they could see, driving ahead of him fifty buffalo.

"Charge them!" yelled Kit.

The Fremont men picked out their animals through rolling clouds of dust. Kit was first to fire. Gripping his horse with his knees he lifted the long rifle. The shot went unheard in the fury of thousands of stampeding hoofs striking hard soil and thousands of horns clashing and great throats trumpeting the fury of angry beasts.

But a buffalo cow stumbled to her knees.

The sentinel buffalos galloped up and down trying to turn the herd. They pawed, with small legs stiff. Bearded heads charged furiously that living wall. The tide would not be stemmed.

But the herd veered from the wagon train advancing slowly over the prairie. Kit noted this gratefully before charging into the herd again to drive out more buffalo. He had a plainsman's fear of stampedes. Buffalo could destroy their wagons and drive off their horses and mules.

Kit selected a place between two charging bull sentinels. Neatly as a matador he slipped his trained horse between and again gave the Indian cry.

Again he was swept into a tossing sea of forms. Only the piercing cry was his defense. But he had known such excitement since as a lad of twelve he had hunted buffalo to the Sioux Indians. Through choking dust he watched for loopholes, guiding his horse with his knees.

The herd raced him along like a hurricane. There was only one thing to fear—and that he had no means of watching. If under this racing herd a prairie dog village should be hidden, with gaping holes to catch at a horse's hoofs, then Kit would be in danger!

How small, that chance, on the vast prairie he was racing over now in this thundering ocean!

The chance overtook Kit. Somewhere under that living sea a prairie dog had his home. The hoof of Kit's horse caught in that cork doorway, throwing the horse and Kit to the earth.

Fremont, watching in horror, saw

Kit Carson swept under the storming tide of buffalo, under horns like sabres, under hoofs like knives.

Kit lay very still. Over him, passed him, stormed the buffalo herd. He stared up into bearded bull-like faces, to small stiff legs set with knife-like hooves.

They did not touch him. Because he lay so still, avoiding only the lunges of his horse that struggled to rise. His horse was his shield against twenty thousand maddened buffalo. Fremont, who through the rolling dust had seen his scout go down, offered up a quick prayer. Outside that storming sea the Fremont men stood transfixed with horror. Maxwell lifted his rifle. "I'm going to shoot Kit's horse," Maxwell yelled. "At least we can save his silver bridle."

At that moment they saw Kit spring to his feet as the horse regained its balance, hanging to its mane despite the jostling buffalo, leaping to its back, clinging there.

A cheer rose from twenty white throats such as never had been heard on the plains.

"Thank the Lord I didn't shoot the horse," thought Maxwell.

Kit dashed out between clattering horns.

"Charge!" he shouted to the transfixed men as if nothing had happened.

He was off after a bull running stiff tailed from the herd. With a whoop of delight he fired from his running horse and brought it down. The herd was fleeing now against the wind. The Fremont men chased the buffalo a few miles whooping like Indians and Fremont added a young bull to the kill. The bull leaders swept to the rear to fight the hunters. At times they charged together in an attempt to destroy horses and riders.

That night, the explorers feasted. Forgetful of Pawnee and danger they sat long over the fires, each man broiling on a stick his favorite tid-bit, liver or steak or tongue, or the "hump fat" loved by mountain men. And Kit, relaxing, told of the prairie dog dug out that had nearly sent him to death.

"Nothing cuter than a prairie dog," he added, generously. "Poor little fellow. A prairie dog is never alone in his house. He has a rattle-snake and a little owl boarding with him."

And Kit told them of hunting buffalo with Sioux and Apaches who struck dexterously with their long lances at the vulnerable place behind the buffalo's shoulder. He told of having seen buffalo as far west as Green River in Wyoming, but that none were as far west as Oregon. He had seen one herd of two hundred thousand buffalo.

But he said nothing of his own courage in rising like a man from the dead out of that buffalo stampede. Fremont, listening, was baffled by the honesty and modesty of Kit Carson. That night Fremont wrote in his diary: "Indians and buffalo make up the poetry and life of the prairie."

Fremont was recording every bit of their journey, knowing he was making a historical memorandum of an unknown world. He noted brush and flowers, rivers and plains. He sketched and surveyed, classified, even named them. He noted, as they marched on after the buffalo hunt, that for many miles there was not a blade of grass. The buffalo had eaten bare the plain.

Fremont collected and itemized botanical, meteorological and geological specimens. He analyzed the very soil they rode over. He drew routes of the trail they were following and its practicability. With the carefully adjusted instruments he lived in constant dread of injuring, he took latitudes and longitudes and elevations.

In such moments he seemed to be born anew—he was Fremont the Pathfinder.

Beyond the Dreams of Kings

Perfumes from France, woollens from England, shoes from Massachusetts, oranges from Florida and California, coffee from Brazil, laces from Switzerland, motor cars from Michigan, pineapple juice from Hawaii . . .

Isn't it marvelous how the intricate machine of commerce constantly gathers the necessities, conveniences and luxuries of life from the four corners of the earth and puts them down right here in our home town?

Have you ever stopped to think what an important part advertising plays in making all this possible?

Without advertising, no merchant could afford to risk a large investment in merchandise—and wait and wait till some chance customer happened in. . . . Without advertising, you would be unaware of the many lovely, useful, needful things assembled in the stores for your convenience. . . . Without advertising, finding what you wanted at a price you could afford would be a matter of luck or of patient plodding from store to store.

Mass production and sales volume—through advertising—have brought to the American people an ease and comfort of living that would have been beyond the wildest dream of kings of old.

ON THE SCREENS

GRAND

The topical story dwells upon the fine distinction between ethical or non-ethical revelations a professional trained nurse may or may not divulge. Lowe is cast as a wealthy criminal attorney who sacrifices romance and his reputation as an invincible courtroom strategist when he defends his young rival on an open-and-shut murder charge.

Foran and Miss Mack complete an unusual love triangle as a young prize fighter and a beautiful nurse, who, because of her profession, sees much, hears much but fears to speak. Action begins when Foran, "doped" and badly battered in a bout, is miraculously brought through a fight for his life by the nurse.

One of the darkest secrets of Louise Rainer's life has come to light. She was "thrown out" of one of Europe's most famous theatres.

Miss Rainer confessed her early "disgrace" while comparing events of her struggling years with the role she plays in "Dramatic School," showing today at the Ritz Theatre.
In the picture, Miss Rainer plays the part of a poor factory worker who struggles through dramatic school, scorned by her classmates, and eventually achieves success against great odds. Her classmates include Pauline Goddard, also starred in the new production.

Scoring

In one of the best tilts played this season, the Rohm and Haas five won the second half honors of the Bristol Basketball League by nosing out the Falls Township Alumni, 35-34, on the Italian Mutual Aid floor.

A double-decker by Joe Roe with twenty seconds remaining to be played gave the chemical makers the triumph. At the time of Roe's field goal, the Alumni boys were leading, 34-33.

DeRisi attempted a field goal for the Alumni boys and missed. The ball rebounded off the backboard to Sammy Smith, who quickly passed to Johnny Cole. DeRisi went to cover Cole who got the sphere away fast to Roe who was under the basket. The winning field goal was the result.

The game was close from start to finish, the lead exchanged several times during the course of the game but most of the time, the Falls team was out in front. The losers missed plenty of their shots while the Maple Beach outfit were much more accurate with their shots.

Falls outscored the Rohm and Haas team from the field, 14-13, but could only muster six fouls in thirteen tries while the winners had nine successful fouls in fourteen tries.

Cole was high scorer for the winners with eleven points. High men for Falls were Briegle and Duerr. Duerr was injured in the second period but came back to play the final quarter with the right side of the face bandaged.

Before the tilt began, the fans stood in silence for one minute as a tribute to Edmund Dugan, a player of the basketball league who passed away yesterday. After the games, the managers of the circuit decided to play a benefit game immediately after the play-off series is over. Rohm and Haas will play St. Ann's in the best of a three-game series, beginning Monday night.

McLEOD MADE A NUMBER OF ALL-AMERICAN TEAMS AS HALFBACK LAST FALL

SCHOOL COURT LEAGUE TO END THIS WEEK

Lower Bucks County schools will confine their court play strictly to their own private little warfares this week with every team in action twice as the league campaign draws the curtain upon another season. Even the girls circuit will have a full slate for the week with two tilts on both playing nights. Bristol, Morrisville, and Buckingham, will play two games while Bensalem and Southampton have only one more league tilt to erase from their respective cards in girls play.

The week—and the season too—will close with the big climactic contest involving the two top teams of the circuit, Bristol and Morrisville, who will clash on the local basketball court on Friday evening, in the tussle that will, in all probability, decide the 1939 championship. On the same evening, Bensalem will journey to Buckingham to close its season, while Southampton and Fallsington conclude their campaign in the only off-night game, the evening before at Trenton.

In the girls' circuit, the last ray of light to the championship to any other school than Bristol was shut out completely when the local girls downed the Doegirls from Buckingham last Tuesday. Nevertheless, there can still be a lot of shuffling around of the teams, depending on the outcome of the games on this week's slate.

While the Southampton Canines will make their final bid to evacuate the league basement at the expense of Bristol High tonight at Southampton, the Buckingham Doegirls will attempt to sew up fourth place for themselves by upsetting the Starlings. Morrisville still has a good chance of taking second place or at least tying for that spot in the final standings, and will, therefore, turn on the heat to down the Doegirls, especially following their surprise setback handed them by Southampton. The latter is hoping to catch Bristol off guard like they did Morrisville.

GOODWILL FIREMEN WIN
OVER THE CELTICS, 65-36

Bruce Gilliard and Charlie Hughes went on a scoring spree last night in the first game played on the Italian Mutual Aid floor as the Goodwill Firemen conquered the Celtics, 65-36, in a one-sided fray.

It was Gilliard's shooting in the second half that carried the hoemen to victory. The first half ended with the score deadlocked, 24-24, but when the center for the Swain street team started to rip the cords with double-deckers in the third and fourth periods, it was a walk-away.

Twelve field goals were made by Gilliard which topped the total points scored by Hughes by one. Hughes had ten two-pointers and three out of three fouls.

Jimmy Lake led the losing team in scoring with five field goals and two fouls.

It was announced last night that the Goodwill team will play the preliminary game Monday night, meeting the Holmesburg Knights of Columbus five.

AT THE CAPITOL

HARRISBURG, Feb. 21.—(INS)—Forecasting on Capitol Hill has reached a new high in the past few weeks. . . . The source has been the 22 special Legislative committees which have been meeting in the absence of the Legislature. . . . And most of the forecasting and most of the guessing in the opinion of most political observers will be just that and nothing more.

President of Spain to Resign

Paris, Feb. 21.—President Manuel Azana of Spain will resign on Thursday, following a French Cabinet meeting which is expected to agree upon de jure recognition of General Franco's government. It was reported on reliable authority here today. As Franco was understood proceeding with plans to reorganize the government to make his men "nationally comprehensive in character," Charles Saint, French chef de cabinet, returned to Paris from the border. He submitted to Foreign Minister Bonnet a formal written report from Senator Leon Berard, semi-official French envoy sent to Burgos to arrange an armistice.

France, it was learned, is hopeful that assurances will be received from Franco before Thursday that his government will not subscribe to the anti-comintern pact.

Meanwhile, well informed circles disclosed that United States Ambassador Bullitt yesterday informed the French foreign office that Washington will not oppose de jure recognition of Franco by the French government.

Advices reaching French government circles indicated Franco may hand the insurgent premiership to his brother-in-law, Ramon Saner, but retain actual leadership of the insurgent regime himself under a higher title.

Eight Navy Planes Crash;
2 Pilots Die; 1 Ship Burns

with radio beam detectors and radio sending and receiving sets. The remainder were student ships and had no radio equipment.

The formation flight had begun about 7.30 p. m. (CST) as a test of night flying and the planes had been circling around the countryside for two hours when a fog suddenly rolled in from the Gulf of Mexico.

The layer of mist was about 700 feet thick and although the pilots were able to see the lighted field dimly they were unable to judge their distance from the ground once they entered the fog.

They kept circling above the vicinity, flying back and forth to other fields in a vain attempt to find a clear ground for landing, until their gasoline supply was exhausted.

Then one by one they selected a deserted section, cut the switches, deflected the ailerons to send the ship into a sudden dive and stepped over the side.

Lieut. J. P. Monroe, aide of the naval air station commandant, announced that the pilots who saved themselves by jumping were Lieut. A. C. P. Horta, another Brazilian officer, Lieut. E. G. Osborn, Cadet R. F. Chalmers, Lieut. (junior grade) Cummings; Cadet C. W. Harbert, and Lieut. R. E. Harney.

The pilots who brought their radio-equipped planes down safely near Atmore, Ala., are Cadet J. E. W. Whitener; Lieut. W. G. Jackson and Lieut. J. W. Brett, Jr. All are instructors. A. C. McDonough, a fourth instructor, landed safely near Greenville, Ala.

AT THE CAPITOL

HARRISBURG, Feb. 21.—(INS)—Forecasting on Capitol Hill has reached a new high in the past few weeks. . . . The source has been the 22 special Legislative committees which have been meeting in the absence of the Legislature. . . . And most of the forecasting and most of the guessing in the opinion of most political observers will be just that and nothing more.

The special committees, which are made up of Republican Senate and House committee members, are attempting to devise a Legislative program for the Legislature which reconvenes February 27 at which time Gov. Arthur H. James will present his budget. . . . Taxation, relief and revenue in general have been the major points on the committee agendas under consideration.

Everything under the sun in these three categories have been brought forward by some interested committee member as worthy of attention.

Most of them, like the plans for an income tax and decentralization of relief, are apparently foredoomed to failure for the Administration has already announced its opposition to them. . . . But the forecasting and the guessing goes on.

Not many people picture the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania as a business corporation, yet it is exactly that, points out the State Planning Board in its annual report, and the second largest of its kind in the world. . . . It is also the second largest in assets in the United States, with a value of $30,000,000,000.

WE'VE GOT THE COLD FACTS ABOUT
FORD ECONOMY

DEALING in perishable foods demands dependable trucks. Shippers Precooling Service relies on the Ford V-8 engine, in their trucks and for operating precooling, ripening and air-conditioning machinery mounted on these trucks. They say:

"After a series of tests we chose Ford V-8 because we found that the Ford V-8 engine has more capacity than other engines rated at the same horsepower. We found the V-8 engine reliable in operation under all conditions. The Ford Engine and Parts Exchange Plan lacks the time element vital in handling perishable foods. Lengthy delays for either parts or repairs would prove too costly to us and to our customers.

"Our drivers are completely satisfied with the performance of our Ford V-8 Trucks."

Ford Economy now covers a wider range of truck operations than ever before. See your Ford dealer about an "on-the-job" test.
